F. B. FORBES, Esq., Chairman.

W. M. BOYD, Esq., Wm. MEYERINK, overmuch solemn in these dismal days, but now and then I feel tempted to apply the Socratic method to the various reasons given at Exeter Hall, and other resorts of the indolent slaves, to account for the slow progress of Protestant Christianity (of the slow progress of Christianity in the East. The confusion of tongues puzzled me.)

Foreign opium may be kept out of the Empire, and all the wide expanse of poppy plantations may be up-rooted in China, but yet the Chinese people will not live according to the pattern designed for them by the missionaries. The climate of China is such that the Chinese people are altogether in quite different fashion from the English. Labour is excessive, exhausting, and ill paid, and the labours of many kinds are superhuman and unfit for man's bodily frame. Opium now is the cheapest solace to be had, and cannot be put in disuse unless a substitute is found. I do not deny that the Chinese people are avaricious, that it has become to many millions a necessity. In some of the United States where all alcoholic drink—Gladstone's claret even—is prohibited, the people take to opium, or smoke or chew tobacco in deadly excess. If opium is prohibited in China the people will now do what they crave for some cheap and habitually relaxing substitute. The forms of craving may change, and the chance the stimulant of alcohol may be morally and physically preferable to the narcotic poppy-juice. Both alcohol and opium are essentially evil things, potent as they are to work for misery; but pernicious though they be, man will have one or the other. If the Chinese people are to grow in China, the consumption that will be stopped will have a substitute, and in future times right-thinking men of the Empire will cry aloud against the demoralization caused by ardent spirits.

The Chinese land-telegraph answers well, and, if the revenue should not suffice to pay for it, the Government might be excusing it would be to charge half the present tariff rates. The lines have a very rough appearance, but may be better than

To-day (Ash-Wednesday), the Roman Catholic Church throughout the world celebrates one of the most impressive ceremonies of that denomination by strewn ashes on the heads of the clergy and of those persons assembled in the church before the Mass begins. The ashes are first consecrated on the altar, and are applying them to the heads of those present the Minister on each occasion repeats the words, "Memento quod cinis es, et cinerem reverteris," i.e., "Remember that thou art dust, and to dust must return."

be immediately thereafter referred to.
The minutes were then continued.
His Excellency then said that he had the honour to announce that the protest, if the hon. member wished, would now be read.
The Hon. Mr. Johnson said he had no special desire for the protest to be read, so long as it was inserted in the minutes.
His Excellency said that it would be entered among the proceedings, but thought it should be read, and he would read it.
The Clerk then said the following :—
THE HON. F. B. JOHNSON TO HIS EXCELLENCY
AND THE CLERK OF COUNCIL.
Hongkong, 13th February, 1882.
I do hereby protest in writing against the decision of Your Excellency, intimated by you in the letter addressed to me by the

THE BANKERS' BOOKS EVIDENCE ADMITTED

His Excellency proposed the second reading of the Ordinance to amend the laws with reference to the Bankers' Books Evidence. He mentioned that the Bill had been prepared by the Colonial Office, and was done under the direction of the late Attorney General, Mr. Phillips, now the Chief Justice, and that he had been long before approved of, and sent back. Speaking in the presence of several Bank directors, he would say that it would in every way facilitate the conducting of business.

The Clause of the bill were then read under his charge at a fire. Assistant Superintendent J. A. Carvalho said he was present at the fire acting as Superintendent. When he arrived on the scene he only observed fire on the top floor, and the firemen were working to clear the way to the spot and went upstairs where he saw two young members of the Volunteer Brigade, whom he ordered down, considering the place too dangerous, as he observed that the first floor had taken fire. He also ordered some men down of the first playground. He then went to make sure the same were ordered to have a hose placed around on the back of the house, and while doing so the roof came in. The inquest was then adjourned till Wednesday next.

poise, of typical Chinamen who year after year have called on the various missionaries of the numerous sorts, armed with a Bible in one hand and a bit of Indian-made opium the other, to ask the Christians to give up smoking. "You yank Indians," print this book, and sell this poison!" is a legend out of date. Some other must be invented, because the tables have been turned. The heathen will still get our sacred books, in questionable shape, but the old romance that stirred Eroter before the opening will lose all its fire. The only opium that will be wanted, and which ought to be of purely Chinese origin, will be for the Chinese market, and on which no sinful tribute has been levied for the Indian government.
